A.

No Buying Day is a special day when people choose not to buy anything. This day is important because it raises problems about our shopping habits and the impact on the environment. During No Buying Day, we learn that happiness doesn't always come from buying things.

On this day, we can do fun things without spending money. We can go for a walk in the nature, play games with friends, or enjoy a picnic. These free or low-cost activities show us the idea that happiness doesn't always come from buying things but can be found in simple and meaningful experiences.

No Buying Day also teaches us to think about the environment. When we buy a lot, it can harm the Earth. On this day, we try to use what we already have and not buy new things. This helps us reduce waste and take care of our planet. This day can be a chance to appreciate what we already have and to think about the things we truly need. Maybe we find new ways to use old things or find that we don't need to buy as much as we thought.

All in all, No Buying Day shows us that we can be happy without buying things all the time. We learn to find out the pleasure of keeping what we have and take care of the Earth. It's a small step, but it helps us become better and more responsible citizens of the world.
