Jason Wu is a world-famous designer. Back to 1990s, he liked changing dolls' clothes and doing their hair when he was little. He didn't like what other boys liked. His neighbors often told his mom that he was not normal. His parents knew life wasn't easy for him then, so they moved to Canada.

Jason didn't know much about English when he moved to Canada. He tried hard to learn English and fashion was a big help to him. He often read his mom's fashion magazines for hours and he looked up new words in the dictionary. This was how he began to love fashion.

His mom saw how much he loved fashion, so she hired design students to help him learn how to sew. His mom always stood by his side and kept encouraging him to pursue dreams. By high school, Jason designed dolls for the American company Integrity Toys. Before he was famous, he tried many types of arts. After high school, he moved to New York to study at a famous design school, Parsons School of Design. In 2007, he finished his "Ready-to-Wear collection" clothing line. It was a big success and he was asked to design clothes for famous people like Michelle Obama, the first lady of the USA. Jason always thanks his mom for her patience and open mind. That's one of the main reasons why he is successful today.
