If you're a fan of chocolate like I am, then you know the delicious treat not only tastes good but is also good for you. However, there's a dark and sad side to chocolate, and few people know about it.

What can be dark about something that's so delicious? Cocoa is the main thing in chocolate, and most of the cocoa comes from small farms in West Africa. I don't know if you know this, but children, between 10 to 15 years old or even younger, have worked as slaves on those farms. In fact, the practice has been around for many years, and little has changed.

These days, over two million children are working in the fields of Ghana and the Ivory Coast. Instead of having fun and enjoying school, these children work long hours in dangerous and tiring environments. They may have to carry heavy loads, spray cocoa trees with pesticides, and burn fields to clear them. These are surprising, right?

Even worse is the fact that many of the children in the cocoa industry were sold to the farms to pay off their families' money problems. Sometimes they are even stolen from their parents, never to see them again. I know I can do something to help those poor children and still enjoy my chocolate treat. With that in mind, I have decided not to buy chocolate from the companies which use child workers.
