Last Saturday, Jill and her family joined a special activity. They got up early and went to Golden Beach. It was a nice day, and the sea was blue and beautiful. But there was trash on the beach. Jill saw many bottles, cups, cans, and glasses. On the beach, there was something else. They were cute small animals—hermit crabs. These hermit crabs didn't have shells on their backs; they had caps or bottles on their backs.

Usually, a hermit crab changes it shell every 12 to 18 months. It often gets a new "home" from the beach because there are many shells. But, there aren't any shells on Golden Beach, so the hermit crabs there use caps or bottles as their "homes." The caps or bottles are bad for them because they don't come off like shells. Hermit crabs can die because their "homes" are too small.

Like Jill and her family, people from different places visited Golden Beach for the hermit crabs. They cleaned up the trash on the beach. Then they put shells back on the beach. This way, the hermit crabs could use them for their new "homes." Together, everyone cleaned up 500 large bags of trash on Golden Beach that day. Jill was tired but happy because she helped these little animals.

In 1998, Sir Alfred flew from Iran to England. He was at the airport in France to change the plane, but he lost his passport. Because he didn't have a passport, he couldn't get on the plane or get into France. So he lived in the airport of France from then on. He slept on a row of red chairs, took a shower in the airport bathroom, and had meals at the restaurants there.

Sir Alfred became a special sight at the airport. Visitors came to take photos with him, and workers there treated him well. In 1995, he had a chance to go to another country. But he said no because he still wanted to go to England. Because he lived in the airport for so long, he became sick. In 2006, he stayed in the hospital and then in the nursing home in Paris. In 2022, Sir Alfred went back to the airport and stayed there again.

Later some people even made a movie from the story of his long stay in the airport.

In November 12, 2022, he died in the airport and ended his uncommon life.
